Senate moves to start negotiations on defense policy bill
July 10, 2018 | Rebecca Kheel

The Senate officially moved Tuesday to reconcile its version of the $716 billion annual defense policy bill with the House's, approving 91-8 a motion to go to conference.

In addition to that move, senators approved two motions to instruct conferees, which are nonbinding directions to negotiators. One, approved 97-2, says Senate negotiators should work to keep in the bill reforms to the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS). The other, approved by the same margin, says negotiators should reaffirm the U.S. commitment to NATO.

The votes come a day before conferees are scheduled to meet at a "pass the gavel" session to officially start negotiations on the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA).
