New Army acquisition chief takes on rapid buying
April 9, 2018 | Jen Judson

Bruce Jette is the new assistant secretary of the Army for Acquisition, Logistics and Technology where he is responsible for not only acquisition but also serves as the science adviser to the Army secretary, is the senior research and development official and is responsible for matters related to logistics.

He has only been on the job for two-and-a-half months, but his knowledge of defense acquisition runs deep.

Jette served in the U.S. Army for 28 years, retiring as a colonel after commanding several armor and cavalry companies and holding various staff assignments at the battalion and brigade level.

But his acquisition roots come from his experience founding the Army's Rapid Equipping Force, serving as program manager for soldier systems, the predecessor of Program Executive Office Soldier. He also earned an Army product manager of the year award for Army airborne electronic warfare systems.
