Chief: This is how the Army must prepare for tomorrow's wars
October 9, 2018 | Michelle Tan

As he enters his fourth year as the Army's top general, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark Milley continues to push for a more ready, lethal and focused force, one that's always training for the next fight.

This includes pushing ahead on key modernization efforts to make sure soldiers have the best equipment the Army can provide.

"It's the infantry, still today, that suffers 70 to 80 percent of the casualties. I want those kids to have the best, bar none, with nothing held back," Milley said. "We owe it to them."
